to find out!

If all goes well, it will be a brand new Bally Silver Sails from 1962, and will be available for free play!

There are many long-standing questions which will be answered by this unboxing, such as:

- Was bingo paperwork included with the games, or did it have to be ordered through the distributor or directly from the factory. Most of us think the paperwork came with the game.
- Did reinforced bingo legs come from the factory that way?
- Did Bally ship their bingos with 'Dead' rubber on the four red playfield posts? Some dispute this and think that dead rubber was added by "greedy" operators. This will answer the question once and for all.
- Which Reflex Unit Gear came installed from the factory?
- What brand of keys come with factory game and what key numbers/stock were used?
- What type of balls were shipped with the game? Brand name and/or magnet-resistant?
- What does a complete score and instruction card package consist of?
- Will there be any spare parts (including extra reflex gears)?
- Will there be any type of factory oils for motors or lubes for stepping units included?
- What is the shipping material like? A Silver Sails head is very heavy, and it will need to have something to prevent damage to the cabinet and backglass in shipment.
- How did they protect the backglass during shipment?
